So You Think It's Fun?

By Kyle Mill for The New Boston Times

Two months ago I chose four jobs I expected to be a lot of fun and decided to spend one day working with a person doing the job: a flight attendant, an actor, a PC game tester, and a photographer. And what did I discover? Being a flight attendant is really hard! I was on my feet all day. If it hadn't been so much fun, this would have bothered me. But I understand it might be less fun if you did it every day for ten years. Then I tried acting. Although I spent 90% of the time waiting for my turn to act, the job was everything I hoped it would be. I'd hoped to have the same experience working as a PC game tester. My friends warned me that it's boring, but I didn't believe them. However, it ended up being exactly that. I was afraid my experience of working as a photographer would be similar to working as a PC game tester, but it was fun.

Jack, a 4-year-old boy from New Zealand, made a phone call to the emergency line last week. He asked the police to come over to see his toys. 'Police lady... Can I tell you something?' Jack asked the dispatcher. 'I've got great toys. Come over and see them!' The boy's father then took the phone, upset by the situation, and explained that he was looking after his other child when Jack used the moment to call 111. A policeman was sent to the boy's house. The boy was very happy and showed him his toys. 'I thought I'd see some expensive items. I thought that was the reason he wanted to show them to someone,' the policeman said, smiling. 'But they weren't. They were old toys. How could anyone be upset with the happy boy?' He then let the boy see the police car. 'The policeman also had an educational chat with the child and his parents about only using 111 for emergencies,' the police spokesperson said.

The Popular Hot Dog Eating Contest in New York City

New Yorkers have held this competition in New York City every year since 1967. Recently, it has gained attention thanks to social media. The one in 2015 is especially worth remembering. That's when Matt Stonie managed to beat the then eight-time champion Joey Chestnut. Matt ate 62 hot dogs in ten minutes while Joey only ate 60. However, there has been a much higher number of hot dogs eaten in the history of this competition: Walter Paul, the very first champion, ate as many as 127! But the time limit then was much longer. So, by eating those 62 hot dogs in just ten minutes, Matt won the competition in 2015. Unfortunately, he hasn't repeated this success yet. Only one man has won since then, the man that Matt beat in 2015. He is a sixteen-time champion now. The next man after him in 2023 was Geoffrey Esper, who hopes to break the current record of 76 hot dogs in ten minutes one day.

Batman

There are cities in the world with unusual names. One of them is the Turkish city of Batman. Until the 1950s, Batman was a village called Iluh. In 1957, the village became a city and was renamed Batman. This was shortly before the TV series with the film character of the same name became a hit. However, many foreigners still visit the city today, thinking that they will see the place after which they think the film character was named. Visitors are then surprised to discover that it was in fact a local river that gave Iluh its current name. The origin of the Turkish word Batman itself is not known but some people believe it might be a short form of the name of the Bati Raman mountain, located east of the city. The current 55-year-old Turkish Minister of Culture and Tourism, a great fan of the film character Batman, is glad that tourists keep visiting the city, thinking it was named after him.

An Extremely Tiny Tokyo Flat

A video showing an extremely tiny Tokyo flat became a huge hit on the Internet recently. It was uploaded by Kaito Chisai who had just moved to Tokyo. He wanted to live in a popular neighbourhood, but he could only afford a 7 m² flat there. As soon as you walk in the door, you hit the sink. Next to it, there are shelves for food. Interestingly, the flat isn't missing a cooker and also has a mini-fridge. The rest of the space is filled with Kaito's bed. Many people told him that if he had a single bed instead of the double one, he would have more room. But Kaito refuses to give it up. He is happy with the flat despite its size and despite sharing the common bathrooms and toilets. They both are two floors higher. 'I just wish there wasn't the big window here. My flat feels really hot in summer,' says Kaito Chisai.

29 What is not there in Kaito's flat?

- A) a double bed

Open Days at the University of Ratherford (UR) 2025

Introduction

Take this opportunity to come and see the University of Ratherford (UR). We are holding three Open Days this year: Friday June 13th, Saturday September 27th, and Saturday October 4th. Feel free to choose whichever date is more convenient for you!

If you are thinking of studying at UR, we recommend getting on our e-mail list by sending us an e-mail to opendays@ur.org. You will then be among the first to know when booking for any of the Open Days has started. To put your name on the list of an Open Day you require, simply fill in a form for the particular date on our website.

You can also follow us on Facebook to see the latest updates regarding the Open Days, or to see the photos from last year's Open Days. On those days 1,300 people out of 1,600 who had booked a place for an Open Day came to see UR. It was the second highest number of people ever; the highest was 1,500 the year before.

Before Your Visit

- 🎓 If you plan to come to Ratherford the day before an Open Day and have nowhere to stay, please note staying in the halls of residence¹ is possible for UR students only. We can arrange simple accommodation for you in the university guest house. It is located a ten-minute walk from the halls of residence.
- 🎓 You need to register at the university library, where you will be given a pass. Registration starts at 9 am and must be completed before the programme begins half an hour later, in the same room.
- 🎓 Unlike last year when student campus guides were wearing red university branded jackets, this time they will put on blue ones. The students will show you around campus. Before you set off, you will be divided into groups by the student guides according to the subject you would like to study. If there are more than eight visitors wanting to study the same subject, they will be further divided into more groups. This is so that no more than eight visitors are in one group.

The Visit

- 🎓 The Open Day is basically a guided tour with students who already attend UR. They will take you to see classrooms, cafés, PC rooms, and the canteen. Except for the Great Teachers' Hall, it will be possible to visit major lecture halls and historical rooms. Student guides will only take you to them and then the professors will take you inside, give you a little talk and then answer any questions you might have.
- 🎓 If you cannot be present, do not worry. When the Open Days end, we will upload videos made during the events. Watching them on the university website, you will discover the campus as if you were here. Live online sessions with professors of your choice will also be possible when the Open Days are over. Just let us know you are interested, and we will arrange further details.

Information Sessions

In case you are unable to visit UR during the Open Days, you can attend an Information Session instead. While we cannot provide the full range of activities available on the Open Days, we will give you a short tour, a quick introduction to life at UR, and the opportunity to ask any questions you may have.

Information Sessions are of course different from the dates of the Open Days. They will be on two Tuesdays and one Wednesday in November, each day at 10 am. Please note that you will not be able to meet the teaching staff, visit specific subject areas, or view accommodation as part of these sessions. Please consider booking early because the number of visitors has been limited to 1,500. The limit is reached every year, so do not wait.

Julie & Julia: Two Lives Linked by 524 Recipes

By Simon Beck

The movie plot based on a true story starts in the 1950s when one of the main characters – American Julia Child – moved to France and started learning French cooking there. Her book Mastering the Art of French Cooking was later published in the USA. Julia Child is well-liked by my grandparents' generation, which is why they decided to go and see this movie. I personally find her annoying. In the movie, one day in 2002, the other main character – a New Yorker called Julie Powell – decided to cook every recipe from Julia Child's book and write a blog about it. And that's what the movie is about. Julie Powell is played by Amy Adams. I liked Amy Adams in this movie. I have been a fan of blogger Julie Powell too and the actress made her funny. The first main character is played by Meryl Streep. So, when I found out that she played Julia Child, she became the reason I went to see the movie after all, because I'm her biggest fan.

The other performances were also great. The director chose good actors to play the husbands of the two main female characters. Although the husbands are shown as boring, for me it's fine because I got to see the men support their wives and that's what's important for the movie. However, I'd have been upset if there were fewer cooking scenes in the movie. In fact, I'd have been happy to see more of them. I also wish there were many more scenes where we could see the characters actually enjoying eating their meals. See, I'm a great eater myself, so I was not happy that they were not presented that way. But I understand that the director wanted the movie to be more about Julie and Julia's lives, not the food itself. And the director divided the time between Julie Powell and Julia Child perfectly.

The music for the movie was created by Alexandre Desplat who has created music for many great movies. He made music for the last two Harry Potter movies, for example, and I think that was the best movie music he's ever created. I liked his music for Julie & Julia as most of it was everything I expected it would be. There are quick and cheerful melodies and at sad moments the music slows down. The speed really couldn't fit the atmosphere of the movie any better. What I find a bit annoying about the music is this: it is much sweeter than it needs to be. After all, it isn't a romantic comedy, just a comedy about food.

In my opinion, Julie & Julia is a very good movie about food, French cooking, and relationships. Anyone who likes French cuisine will enjoy watching it very much. And I even think that if the cooking scenes were longer people who like to cook would enjoy watching the film most of all. People who love cooking shows will love the comedy too. Some scenes, for example cutting the onions fast or putting the lobsters in a pot, will be especially enjoyable for them. However, nobody will have more fun watching the movie than people who are like me – I just love to eat. That's why I enjoyed watching Julie & Julia, although I'm not very fond of French cuisine itself.

I got Julia Child's book Mastering the Art of French Cooking some time ago as a birthday gift. Making French meals is challenging, as you can see in the movie, so I wanted to try it. But did you know that the book has 895 pages?! And there isn't a photo on any of them! I believe any one of my cookbooks with photos helps me more than that. However, things in Julia Child's book are described in a way that isn't difficult to understand. Each of the 524 recipes is explained well. I even had fun reading about the origins of some ingredients. I expected the book without photos to be the most boring cookbook ever, but as I was going through it, I changed my mind completely. I have never been so wrong about a book before, although I still believe that it would be more user-friendly if it had photos.
